It all began in the late 1979's when 90 year-old Master Penman Paul O'Hara explained to his new student, Michael Sull, what it was like to live in the age before typewriters. During the 1 1/2 years that Michael trained under the veteran penman's tutelage, his mentor shared much about his own past from those fabled times of seventy years before. He spoke reverently of his writing masters; about their integrity as teachers, their passion for handwriting, and their phenomenal skill with a pen. And throughout all of his recollections, there were the penmanship stories and legends from that magical time. In Michael's words: "...tales re-told by penmen of old as if read from a dusty page." Paul O'Hara passed away in 1990 at the age of 101. Since that time, Michael has crafted the stories into ballad forms of verse; a style of poetry where the metered rhyme-scheme carries the recitation along with emphasis, interest, and a sense of personal empathy. For the past 25 years, Michael has shared these poems at his workshops in America and abroad through his narrations. All the poems focus on America's Golden Age of Penmanship and the joy of putting pen to paper. In 2011 he published them in a single volume entitled "Poems of a Penman." Over time, many of his students have encouraged Michael to record his narration of the poems for the preservation of the stories, as well as for the enjoyment of the listener.
