Who Was Ferdinand Magellan?

Imagine a time when no one was sure the Earth was round ... when people believed they'd topple over the edge if they sailed too far from home. Imagine a time when most people didn't know there was a Pacific Ocean. Go back five hundred years, when whole continents were still undiscovered, when people thought the Earth was tiny and that monsters swam through its waters. Yet one man decided to sail his ship through unknown seas and discover what was out there.

He was not the first to make such a perilous voyage. But he went farther and stayed away longer than anyone had before. Because of his brains and courage, he is known for being the first man to circumnavigate—sail around—the globe.

Another Great "Who Was" Book

By Amazon Customer

My 8-year-old history buff loves all of the "Who Was" Books. This is what he wrote about this one:

Ferdinand Magellan sailed around the world. Uh kind of. Well let's say his crew sailed around the world. You see he went to the Philippines. He died. I am not going to tell you the details. His ship sailed around the world. He was Portuguese. I love this book.
